

Trade Rationale

OCTOBER MID-MONTH 2024

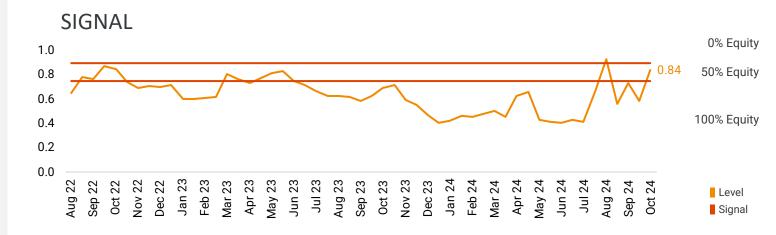

Volatility Level Element

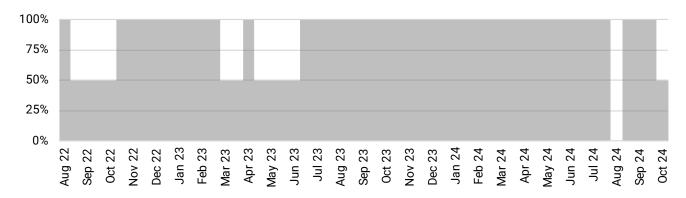

TRADE RATIONALE

The Volatility Element has changed from an overweight to neutral view of the equity market. In recent months, expected stock market volatility has fluctuated, with spikes in August, September, and now October. In early August and September markets dropped aggressively on concerning jobs data but recovered in the latter half of the month as other economic data soothed investors. Although we haven't seen a dramatic change in market values this month, concerns about the economy, the election, and the consistency of the Federal Reserve's monetary policy - not to mention rising geopolitical tensions are contributing to the increased risk. If market volatility expectations continue to change, the Volatility Element, as a more sensitive risk calculation, may further adjust its outlook. For now, the data sees higher risk on the near horizon.
